Ariela Davis is an energetic Jewish educator with close to 20 years of experience teaching a range of Judaic subjects at the middle school, high school and collegiate levels at schools in New York, Jerusalem, Houston and Charleston, SC. Before making Aliyah to Bet Shemesh, Ariela served as the Judaic Principal of Addlestone Hebrew Academy and the Rebbetzin of Brith Sholom Beth Israel, where she worked with students and adults of a range of backgrounds and hashkafot. Ariela received her BA in Journalism from Stern College and her MS in Jewish education from Azrieli Graduate School for Jewish Education and uses her love of writing, speaking and learning to inspire students and adults to find meaning and relevance in Judaism in a way that enables them to connect and flourish on their own individual path. Ariela loves Israeli history and politics, correcting the spelling on street signs in Israel, watching dolphins at sunrise and hiking in Israel, and specifically racing her students up mountains!
